

Art has been a thread woven into texture of my life, regularly appearing in a variety of forms. During a professional career that ranged from writing and publishing to teaching and developing programs like WriterCoach Connection, art was my regular companion. At times it was a practice, like hand-weaving, or an expression of delight and amazement at the world, like the first spring Camellia blossoms or the soaring statement of a bridge.

My book, Pattern Free Fashion, was the happy outcome of my writing and publishing career with my wearable art business. The sewing and crafts publisher I worked for, as publicity and marketing director, asked me to write a book based on the art-to-wear I created and sold through local galleries and boutiques. The Cocoon Wrap in this exhibit is one of the book's projects.

This show represents a variety of my artistic interests, from creating wearable art to the relatively new medium of iPhone Art, also called iPhoneography, the art of capturing and processing images solely with an iPhone or iPad and its amazing editing applications.

I am fortunate to have discovered Arts of Point Richmond, with its talented and supportive group of artists, and I am grateful for the opportunity to present some of my work through this organization.
